Encyclopedia Offer to Close at End of March, Star Says

Bargain of 1,334-Page
Book for $1.25 Expires
in Two Weeks

ENDORSED BY TWO

Miss Beryl Henry, Rev.
Thomas Brewster Praise
Wise Co. Book

Endorsement of the Modern Encyclopedia, which The Star is selling at manufacturer's cost in this territory, was obtained Monday from two local authorities on reference books—Miss Beryl Henry, superintendent of city schools; and the Rev. Thomas Brewster, pastor of First Presbyterian church.

About 40 books have been cleared through The Star office, $1.25 at the office, or $1.40 by prepaid mail—any of which will probably be withdrawn at the close of this month, the price depending entirely on the supply of books available.

The newspaper has handled the Modern Encyclopedia strictly as an educational feature. By taking the books direct from the manufacturer, eliminating all profit agencies, and dominating a vast amount of newspaper advertising, The Star has made available to many families a 1,334-page encyclopedia at a price far less than the cheapest dictionary.

The book amazed Miss Henry and the Rev. Mr. Brewster, that so complete a work could be sold at so low a price. It couldn't be, of course, except for the fact that here is a nationally-known reference work of which 300,000 copies have already been sold—and the manufacturer therefore has already obtained his profit. This is the first book-offering ever made during the seven years of The Star's present ownership, and as a rule it will be that long before a newspaper ever makes such a bargain again.

Looking through the book Monday, Miss Henry said:

"I am more than pleased to own a copy of 'The Modern Encyclopedia' because of 22,000 articles written in concise, clear, well-defined and accurate statements. Moreover, it affords ease for the average reader who desires information relative to subjects which are important and interesting."

"Above all, it is more vital to know where to find facts rather than to attempt to crowd the mental warehouse with material that might never be marketable or, at the best, seldom used. For these reasons I endorse this encyclopedia as being a marked addition to anyone's library."

Louisiana Test to Draw Hope Citizens

Local Men Will Go to Pleasant Hill, La., Below Shreveport

Surface casing has been set and cemented in an oil test well at Pleasant Hill, La., 60 miles southeast of Shreveport, it was announced here Monday by John G. Wooten, driller.

Mr. Wooten said that several Hope persons were interested in the test and that two carloads of Hope citizens planned to visit the location, within the next three weeks when three tests will be made.

Mr. Wooten said the first test would be at a depth of 1,540 feet, the second at 1,700 feet and the third at 1,950 feet. He reported conditions were highly favorable for a producer.

However, if the three tests are unsuccessful, the hole will be drilled to a depth of 3,100 feet, Mr. Wooten said.

Bodeaw Comes Through to Semi-Final, Losing to Warren

Coal Hill, small northwest Arkansas school, won the Arkansas high school basketball championship Saturday night by defeating Warren, 54 to 35, in the state tournament held at Jonesboro.

Bodeaw High School, Nevada county entry, survived the early rounds of the tournament with victories over Union and Stuttgart.

Bodeaw defeated Union, 41 to 29,
and triumphed over Stuttgart, 27
to 24.

Warren eliminated Bodeaw in the semi-final round, 37 to 25. At the half Bodeaw led, 16 to 14, but Warren put on a third-quarter rally to win.

Crosswell led the seniors with 15 points; Goodwin, Bodeaw center, was second with 12 points. The box score:

CROSSWELL (15) BODEAW (8)

Nichols (9) Taylor (3)

Wisner (1) Goodwin (12)

Quimby (9) Dowes (2)

Curry (3) Bailey (6)

Substitutions—Warren: Harris; Bedford; Wesson, Allen, Caudle.

All-State teams selected by officials and coaches:

First team: Coal Hill, and K. Bray,

E. E. Spears, speaking for his father,
W. F. Spears, and himself, Prescott

"I note the Hope Star stated in its

Two Cabins Burn
at Luck's Camp

$1,200 Loss Reported in Sunday Morning Fire on West Edge of City

Two cabins at Luck's Tourist Court on Highway 67, western edge of the city, were destroyed by fire early Sunday morning, causing a loss estimated at $1,200.

The blaze had gained considerable headway when first discovered. There was no chance of saving either cabin.

One of the cabins was rented but not occupied. The other was empty with the exception of several cans of paint, paint brushes and some old rags.

It was believed that the fire started in the cabin among the soiled rags—possibly from spontaneous combustion.

The renter of the cabin was out of town at the time of the blaze. Most of his personal belongings were destroyed.

The meeting starts at 7:30 o'clock and will be followed by a two-day clinic on Wednesday and Thursday at which time the services of several out-of-town lending agencies will be available.

A large attendance is urged.

The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

For many years belief prevailed that waste products resulting from digestion of proteins would damage the kidney, and so those having kidney disease were forbidden to eat meat, fish, and eggs. They were supposed to subsist largely on milk and vegetables.

But extended investigation now leads authorities to believe that diseases of the kidney are due primarily to germs. If this is true, the use of diet, obviously, is not the primary method of control.

Knowing that the kidneys frequently are damaged in scarlet fever, investigators treated two groups of children having this disease, by giving one group a vegetarian diet and the other meat and meat products. In each group there were more than 1000 children. The amount of inflammation of the kidneys in one group was about the same as in the other.

Obviously, therefore, the abstinence from meat did not prevent the nephritis, or inflammation of the kidneys. In fact, the children who had meat in the diet had good color and were energetic, while those who did not receive meat were pale and tired.

These observations have led to the conclusion that abstention from meat and meat products does not prevent nephritis. Moreover, the vegetarian diet fails to provide the substances necessary for blood building.

Chronic inflammation of the kidneys may be due to innumerable causes, and may have various effects on the kidney itself, attacking it at one time in one portion, and at another time in

Today's Health Question

Q.—Please tell me whether mineral matter in meat and potatoes can be removed entirely by boiling. If the mineral salts cannot be removed in this manner, kindly advise me how it may be accomplished.

A.—It is generally understood that boiling materials in water will remove much of the mineral salts.

However, the mineral salts present in meats and vegetables, as a general rule, are considered beneficial rather than harmful to persons who eat the food.

another portion. It may be associated with hardening of the blood vessels, swelling due to accumulations of water in the tissues, and deficiencies of the blood resulting from malnutrition.

In the acute type of kidney inflammation and infection, patients usually are given fluids, fruits, and cereals. During this stage, because the patients are seriously sick for a short time, the diet is not so significant.

In the chronic type of kidney inflammation, one has to be certain that the diet is not too rich in sugar and fats, because of the tendency to produce surplus weight. Therefore, these patients should receive enough protein food to provide for body building and tissue repair. Usually at least 40 grams of protein a day should be included in the diet, and even 60 grams, if this has been shown, will not damage the kidneys or raise the blood pressure.

Of course, a person with chronic inflammation of the kidneys cannot undertake to outline his own treatment, as it applies to diet or anything else. It is well, however, for him to know the essential principles.

In this condition, the doctor very carefully watches the water taken in and excreted, to prevent an accumulation of fluid in the body. These are some of the main considerations in control of this disorder.

Viennese psychiatry, apparently, being what it is, this made no difference at all to anyone until the learned professor bumped into two decayed but ornamental reliques of the old Austrian aristocracy. Then things began to happen to him.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

TORY RYAN, 10, works behind the jewelry counter of a large Manhattan department store. She is to work during the crowded morning cash hour. Tory collides with a good-looking young man. She forgets her name, "TOM HAMMOND" (who does not know her name), bets a friend that within 24 hours he will have a date with her.

He comes to the store next day, in order to talk to Tory he buys a tray of chincordine chips. The sales girl, who is with him, insists, in spite of her reticence, that he will wait for her.

Tory is sent to the advertising department for some watches left there to be repaired.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER V

Tory Ryan, stepping out of the elevator on the first floor of Bergman's department store, had turned to the left instead of the right. It is possible that none of the things that happened that afternoon would have taken place.

Tory could have reached the jewelry department either way. The distance was exactly the same. By turning to the right she passed the silverware counters.

She was carrying the four wrist watches in her hand. An alert, business-like little figure, Tory moved quickly. As she passed the silverware department Mr. Pharis, the young buyer, stepped into the aisle. "I said, 'If you're going in for smuggling you must be an amateur. That's not the way—'

He was smiling good-naturedly. Tory couldn't very well brush past him. She said, indicating the watches, "I've just brought them from the advertising department. They made a sketch of them."

Mr. Pharis picked up the tiny "debutante special." "How much is this one?" he asked.

"Seventy-five fifty."

"Good little watch," Mr. Pharis nodded.

Maurine Ball, two counters beyond, glanced up just then. Maurine saw Mr. Pharis with his head bent slightly and Tory listening, nodding in agreement. Maurine didn't see the watches. But she knew that when Mr. Pharis looked at her like that, invariably he asked for a date. She concluded, therefore, that he was making a date with Tory.

Anger, consuming and unreasoning, swept over Maurine. The day before when Tory had been chosen to pose for the advertising photographs it had been a blow to the other girl's pride. This was much worse!

Maurine's face, above the carefully penciled crimson lips, went white, and the customer, asking the price of the charm bracelet, had to repeat her question.

It was only a few moments later that Tory slipped the watches into their place on the satin folds inside the counter. Then she got out the brown-covered book in which merchandise borrowed by other departments was listed. It was a rule that merchandise taken anywhere else in the store must be "signed out" and "signed in" with the name of the person to whom it was entrusted.

Tory, about to sign for the watches, looked up to see Maurine beside her.

Maurine controlled her voice well: "There's a woman over there," she said with a nod, "who's been waiting for you."

Tory turned, and instantly remembered it was the woman in the leopard coat—the one who had bought the compact and then discovered she lacked money to pay for it.

The woman looked up and recognized Tory. The girl smiled and hurried forward. "You're come for your package, haven't you?" Tory said. "It's right here. I'll get it."

She turned to the wrapping desk, and was back with the package.

The woman opened her purse and took out a bill. "While I'm here," she said, "I believe I'll look at that other compact you showed me—the hammered silver one. I think perhaps I'd like to have both of them."

"Certainly."

Tory got out the tray of compacts and the woman decided to take the silver one. Waiting for her package to be wrapped and to receive her change, she said, "I've some more shopping to do next week—gifts for some nieces of mine. You've been so nice about this, I think I'd like to have you wait on me."

"I'll be glad to." Tory told her.

She turned to her next customer. Not once did Tory think of the brown-covered book she had left lying on the counter, or of the watches in their case.

For 20 minutes more she was busy. Then she was surprised by a touch on her arm. Miss Burrows, the buyer, said, "Miss Ryan, will you come with me to Mr. Henderson's office. Right away."

"Why—yes."

Tory could see that something was wrong. She stepped out into the aisle beside Miss Burrows and said anxiously, "What is it? Has anything happened?"

"I'd rather not say anything until we're upstairs."

THEY stepped into the elevator. It stopped out a moment later on a hallway that was carpeted. Then they were entering a door marked "Private."

Tory had never been in this office before. A middle-aged man with a large chin and wearing rimmed spectacles sat at a large, highly-polished desk. Miss Burrows stepped forward. She said, "This is the girl, Mr. Henderson. Her name is Tory Ryan."

The man at the desk cleared his throat. "Won't you—ah—sit

further with the matter."

Tory took her hands from her test-stained face. "But, Miss Burrows, I didn't take the watch!" she insisted. "Oh, won't you please believe me?"

The older woman only said, "Come with me. I'll speak to the cashier."

Ten minutes later Tory Ryan was walking along the slushy street. Tears blinded her and she brushed them back, but they would not stop. Passers-by turned to look at the girl curiously. Toby did not see them. She walked on, unaware that the cold wind was blowing her coat back, that the soles of her feet were wet, and that she was shivering.

Bergman's was behind her. Bergman's and the job she had been so proud of. She was not going back there—ever. She had been discharged, branded a thief.

Hollywood

By Paul Harrison

HOLLYWOOD—An airplane slips through a narrow mountain pass during a heavy snowstorm. Propellers falter; you know that ice must be forming on the wings. It loses altitude, almost grazes the tops of tall pines, flattens to a forced landing in a meadow beside an icy river. Wheels plow through deep white banks and it comes to a clumsy, breath-taking halt.

Fifteen feet away a perspiring director yells, "Cut!"

The incident has occurred in the miniature tank on the Paramount lot.

The scene is for "Thirteen Hours by Air," in which Fred MacMurray is supposed to be the pilot of a trans-continental run.

Filmsaking techniques, 16 in all, maneuver a four-foot model airplane with a maze of slim wires and pulleys. They're the puppets of Hollywood. In the background are mountains made of wood and plaster. Powdered gypsum is fed into a wind machine and it speeds past the cameras like snow.

Other wires carry current to the desk. Miss Burrows picked it up. "If you returned the watches, why didn't you sign for them?" she asked.

"But I did."

"All of them?"

"Yes."

"There are three watches in the case," Miss Burrows said. "The fourth—and most valuable—is not there."

"But, Miss Burrows, I did put all of them in the case. All four of them. It must be there!"

The brown-covered book lay on the desk. Miss Burrows picked it up. "If you returned the watches, why didn't you sign for them?" she asked.

"But I did." Toby began, then suddenly stopped. She remembered she hadn't signed the book. She had meant to—and then she had gone to wait on the woman in the leopard coat instead.

Mr. Henderson was flipping back the pages of the notebook. He held it up, opened to the last page on which there was an entry. "There is no signature," he said, "except the one showing that the watches were taken to the advertising department. It seems—"

THERE was a knock at the door and Henderson called out, "Come in!"

A man in a blue suit, wearing a felt hat, entered. He pulled off the hat rather awkwardly as he crossed to Henderson's desk and laid something down. It was a tiny, diamond-studded wrist watch.

"We found it," the man drawled, "in her locker."

Toby did not understand what he meant for a moment. She looked up to face three pairs of eyes staring at her, three faces, grimly accusing. Suddenly the girl threw up one hand.

"It isn't true!" she cried. "It can't be. I didn't take the watch and I don't know anything about it! I tell you I didn't take it—"

Her head dropped forward and she covered her face with both hands. Sobs shook her shoulders. The voices of the others went on, but Toby did not hear them. She did not know what they were saying. She wept on until Miss Burrows touched her shoulder.

"Come," the woman said. "The cashier will give you your check. It's an hour before closing time, but you needn't go back to the department. Since the watch has been returned we won't go any further with the matter."

Toby turned to her next customer. Not once did Toby think of the brown-covered book she had left lying on the counter, or of the watches in their case.

For 20 minutes more she was busy. Then she was surprised by a touch on her arm. Miss Burrows said, "Miss Ryan, will you come with me to Mr. Henderson's office. Right away."

Hope's Song

I hear it singing, singing sweetly,
Softly in an undertone,
Singing us if God had taught it,
"It is better farther on!"
Night and day it brings the message,
Sings it while I sit alone;
Sings so that the heart may hear it,
"It is better farther on!"
Sits upon the grief and sings it,
Sings it when the heart would grieve,
Sings it when the shadows darken,
"It is better farther on!"
Farther on! Oh, how much farther?
Count the miles—stones by one,
No! No counting—only trusting,
"It is better farther on!"—Selected.

The DeAnn club met March 5, at the schoolhouse with Mr. Mountcastle and Miss Velma Alford present.

The club was called to order by the president, Dorsey O'Steen. The minutes were read and adopted. Mr. Mountcastle made a very interesting talk on, "Home Orchards." Then Miss Alford and Mr. Mountcastle gave out some orchard literature. We then had a short business session in which we took in four new members. Our present membership is 23.

The reporters read the report of each member on each project. The meeting then closed to meet again the first Thursday in April.

The 4-H club of Columbus met March 10, 1936. The house was called to order by the president.

The secretary called the roll and the minutes of the last meeting were read. Mr. Mountcastle taught us some mathematical tricks. The club adjourned until next meeting day.

Mussel Poisoning
Due to PhosphorusMussels Eat Protozoa, and Poison Passes Into Human Beings

BERKELEY, Calif.—(P)—Phosphorus so much admired by ocean travelers actually is a deadly poison which has taken an uncounted number of human lives, researchers at the University of California show.

Tiny protozoa, called gonyaulax, cause the display. Those are eaten by mussels, and wherever that mollusk carries the danger of infection, said Professor Charles A. Kofoid and W. Forest Whedon of the University who have traced the gonyaulax to human beings, where it causes quick paralysis and often death.

There is no known remedy, they said.

CLUB NOTES

The 4-H club met at the McCaskill Junior High School Thursday, March 12. The meeting was called to order by the president, Todd Scott, and the following program was rendered:

Roll calls. 4-H club song, all. Story of Boys and Girl's clubs, Marguerite Long. 4-H club, a Federal Enterprise, Eva Jean Shuffield. Membership and Activities of 4-H Club, Lett Rhodes. 4-H Club Problems, all.

After the program Mr. Mountcastle and Miss Griffin lectured to us on the transplanting and pruning of different plants. Mr. Mountcastle also brought some microscopic slides of disease germs which everyone had an opportunity to see.

The following members were enrolled, making us a total of 18 boys and 35 girls: Derwood Young, Dexter Reece, Jay Rhodes, James Hood, Bernice Daniels, Margaret Stone, Orna Clark, Gertrude Moore, Lillian Ball, Marie Puryear, Lucille Keeton, Iris Hampton, Corine Stuart, Letha Curtis, Esther McBrayer, Winifred Ball, Claudia Curtis, Lois Roberts, and Fern Curtis.

1916, they supported it by a majority of 2 to 1, he said. The legislature had no mandate for its action last year, he declared.

Dr. Millar reviewed the history of the fight against liquor in Arkansas during the past 50 years and said that the old local option system which provided for voters to register their preference for wet or dry communities as regularly as the biennial election rolled around was more desirable than the local and county option system now in effect.

However, he reported that in 34 elections since the current state liquor law was passed six out of eight counties and 22 out of 26 towns had voted dry. He told his audience that he and other leaders were not sure yet which

Shreveport
Meantie in the Feature Event

LeRoy McGuirk, world's light heavyweight wrestling champion, will appear here Thursday night against Charley Carr, Shreveport midget, in the feature event of the Fair Park wrestling show.

This will be McGuirk's second appearance in Hope. Last summer he attracted a record crowd. The photo shows McGuirk wearing the light heavyweight championship belt, which will be on exhibit here Thursday.

Promoter Bert Mauldin announced that Walter Miller, who took two straight falls from Lon Cheney here last week, will meet Billy Venable in the semi-final event.

Promoter Mauldin announced a change in admission price. He said that 35 cents would entitle a person to any seat in the house. Former prices were 25 and 40 cents.

Mauldin said that he was making arrangements to take care of one of the largest crowds ever to attend a wrestling show in Hope. The fight program is being advertised as far northeast as Arkadelphia.

erred with tough, wind-resisting grasses.

"We planted everything in wheat," he recalls. Then, in the spring of 1932, the drought hit. The fields dried up. We replanted the wheat. A cloudburst hit, and the fields washed away. We planted a third time. The dust storms hit us then, and blew the land away. We haven't made a crop since."

In 1933, in 1934, and in 1935, the wheat was planted. It was all blown away. This year, on borrowed money, Rutherford planted 300 acres of wheat on the long chance that he might be lucky. But it looks as though he was going to lose it all again for the fifth consecutive year.

"Alcohol, we think, is Public Enemy No. 1," she said. "A man under its influence is an object of pity. He has injured himself in the same sense that a man with a broken leg is injured."

Mrs. Gillespie and other speakers said that the harring of liquor advertising in newspapers and magazines and on the radio would be a big step in the right direction. In that connection it was recalled that before repeal the wets had declared the number of liquor consumers increasing, that one of the tenets was for giving legal liquor to those people who were bound to drink anyhow.

Quit?

"No," he said. "I guess I'll stay. I made quite a stack of money out here, and now I've put it all back. But I'm sticking."

"Why Leave Now?"

Queen Mary Unnoticed
 LONDON—(P)—Unable yet to undergo the ordeal of a public appearance, Queen Mary nevertheless does not spend all her time in the apartments and gardens of Buckingham Palace.

She recently paid a surprise visit, on a Sunday afternoon, to the Park Lane mansion of Sir Philip Sassoon to view paintings by Gainsborough, her favorite artist.

She was unrecognized as she drove through the streets in a closed automobile with the Princess Royal. Her daughter has been a devoted companion of the widowed queen.
